Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Hebrew: A Dramatic Sketch Isadore Finkelstein, a Ghetto Jew, has become rich through a lucky investment, and in order to realize his ambition to be a millionaire, he embarks in a railway enterprise in Montana. He has a daughter, Rachael, whom he idolizes and for whose happiness he is constantly striving. The scene opens on Christmas Eve and Isadore is remembered with presents by friends, including a dress suit which he decides not to wear because the people of the Ghetto might think he is growing proud because of his wealth. While felicitating Rachael upon their good fortune, a telegram is received announcing the failure of the railway scheme, by which his fortune is swept away and he suddenly becomes a pauper. All that is left Isadore is the $500 bill which had been sent him by a man who had robbed him some years previously, and his dead wife's engagement ring, which he takes from a box on the mantel. Rachael is heartbroken, but Isadore revives her courage by telling her that they will return to the Ghetto and re-embark in business. Meanwhile Mrs. Arthur Jamieson (doubled by Rachael, if desired) appears at Isadore's house with the request that he lend her $500 to prevent the foreclosure of a mortgage on her home and the eviction of herself and children. It develops that Jamieson had done Isadore a wrong by causing his arrest on a false charge of swindling and he refuses to listen until he is told that Jamieson is dead, and that Jamieson had once saved his life after he had been robbed and thrown into the river. When Isadore...
