Credit rests ultimately upon the fact that many persons possess wealth who have no present use for it, and are willing that it should be employed by those who can and will make use of it. This explanation of credit will serve to indicate the important functions which banks play in the world of business. They are reservoirs of credit. In them are gathered claims upon the unemployed wealth of the country, and through them the wealth is directed by loans into 1 channels of usefulness. Man is no more than a highly developed animal, yet there is a wide difference between man and other animals. He is the only animal whose desires increase as they are nourished; the only animal who is never satisfied. The want of every other living thing is fixed and uniform. The horse of to-day aspires to no more...
