Not illustrated. 1878 Excerpt: .these ten year gone. Then I will alight and wait till the gentleman arrives, returned Lady Martock, undeterred by this inviting description. As the carriage door was opened, Gwinny peered within, and saw a lovely child asleep upon the seat, an outlandish figure--a Norman nurse--seated beside him. Then she plucked at Lady Martock s dress, saying, in her most wheedling voice, Tell the witchwoman to let the pretty boy come out and play with me, will you? In angry disgust, Lady Martock twitched her robe from the dreadful fingers holding it, and then turned to her servants. Don t permit this creature to come near the child.--My good woman, you should keep this poor idiot out of the sight of visitors: she is very annoying. This last was to Widow Treherne, who, being terrified at the prospect of perhaps losing money, at once ordered Gwinny peremptorily to bed, and meeting with no obedience, seized her broom--an instrument with which the helpless creature was not unacquainted--and with this drove her daughter into a corner of the kitchen, and held her there while Lady Martock took refuge in the mildewy parlor. Now, although the broom was at times, when Gwinny was in a troublesome mood, a downright necessity, it never failed to put her in a towering rage. Ill be revenged! she cried. Ill curse them all; and Gwinny s curse kills! Lady Martock heard her, and closed the door with a shudder. She, too, was...
