Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: . . . closely hugging each other, their summits presenting a series of strange stones fashioned into every conceivable shape; the grand Cathedral Dome; Sentinel Dome, towering in single grandeur; Liberty Cap, an isolated granite mass, crowned with ancient juniper trees; the rugged point called Hoffmans Finger; the graceful Spires, stretching 500 feet above the rock on which they rest; the Two Guardsmen--these, and numerous noble peaks, make the tour of the Yosemite inexpressibly grand and inspiring. Nature has carved on a magnificent scale in this marvelous valley, glorious with towering rock, whose boldness is often softened by silvery cascades of extreme beauty. And we realize here, as in few other places, what powerful agencies scooped out this great gorge--glaciers, earthquakes and other titanic forces, which are but Natures tools, and which she handles with matchless skill. OUR SAILORS TALISMAN. By R. F. Wai. sh. Perhaps the most universal superstition among seafaring men is that which is connected with the saving qualities of a childs caul. No matter how unseaworthy the vessel, the crew have no fears if they have on board one of these strange talismans. Nor does this superstition belong only to sailors; for householders, in many parts of the world, imagine their residences safe from fire so long as they possess a childs caul. This talisman consists of a membranous film which is sometimes found covering the face of a child at its birth, and which, if not immediately removed, would suffocate the infant. But so...
